Eight individuals are invited to spend the weekend at a country house on an island off the coast of Devon. When the guests and the two servants are all assembled, a voice from a loudspeaker accuses each of committing a murder in the past for which he or she was never punished. All of a sudden, one of a collection of statues falls from the fireplace mantle and the first victim immediately meets his fate. With no way off the island, the suspense mounts as the statues, one by one, fall the ground, each followed by another victim dispatched in a different manner. The novelty of the story, Agatha Christie’s remarkable ability to generate unbridled suspense, and that fact that you will never guess “who done it,” have all combined to make this one of the best mysteries ever written, and as seen by its successes in print, on stage, and in film, Agatha Christie’s most popular.
